

I bring approachability, dedication, and a deep love for this community. I've spent countless hours on the sidelines of practices, games and lessons, talking with other parents and residents, listening to their concerns and hopes. Those conversations have shaped my belief that what people are looking for most is connection—to each other and to the decisions that shape our town.

I want Montreal West to remain a place where parents feel safe letting their kids roam freely and where seniors feel safe, supported, and valued. I want to keep this town attractive to young families while ensuring it remains affordable and welcoming to those who have called it home for decades.

I believe in the power of new energy and fresh ideas—and in the importance of bringing more voices into the life of our town. I have ideas that I look forward to sharing in the months ahead, but even more importantly, I bring energy, determination, and a deep commitment to turning good ideas into action.

I'm excited to play a part in building a future for Montreal West that honours our past and welcomes what's next—together.